Got Love, Will Travel

Go Philanthropic Travel Company

Rochester-based Go Philanthropic believes the best way to explore is to change the world without leaving a mark. It's some Matrix-sounding stuff, but is actually rather simple: Trips to Indochina, India, Central or South America include the usual site-seeing and five-star pampering, but also offer plenty of opportunity to give back to the people in the local communities. Ten percent of every trip goes to schools and organizations that need water wells, supplies, furniture, computers, etc. And visits to these recipients are built into the itineraries so you know (or more like go) exactly where your money ends up. At the same time, the company offsets all carbon emissions emitted from their trips and makes sure that they only partner with guides, hotels, and services that use the most sustainable practices. Think of it as travel with an eye towards special effects.
