Ships Ahoy

Lindbald Expeditions

Tugboat tub expeditions, "deep-sea" pool dives – we all wanted to be marine biologists when we were little. Lucky for us, the ship hasn't completely sailed yet. See, in this world, if you can't be a marine biologist, you can always join one...on a Lindbald Expedition. Unlike other tour companies, New York's Lindbald offers first-class trips (to Antarctica, the Galapagos, Sea of Cortez, and other exotic locales) on National Geographic expedition ships that come with exploration teams and state-of-the-art examination tools. So, instead of just pointing and shooting, you can also learn about the mission of the explorers onboard, play with their fancy machinery, and attend daily lectures and forums held by National Geographic scientists, naturalists, and researchers. Can you say, best game of pretend ever? Eat your heart out, Zissou!

Book your maiden voyage today at expeditions.com. Part of each trip is donated to local organizations that help preserve the wilderness for future generations.
